Reasons for raising or relocating a structure:

- Relocating or installing a new foundation under a home of historic value to preserve it.
- A failing or non-existing foundation or basement.
- Relocating or repositioning a structure on it's lot to maximize the usability of the area.
- Located in a flood zone, elevating a structure a few feet can eliminate any problems associated with that.

Things to consider:

- When relocating a structure, will it fit from point A to point B?
- Consider both the width and the height of the structure (i.e. trees, telephone poles, wires, etc…)

We have all the excavation and demolition equipment to handle removal of old foundations, and the prep work for new foundations.

Historic:

We take great pride in helping preserve the historic value of any structure from your home or family heirloom to other historic structures such as churches, school houses, barns, lighthouses, meeting halls etc… for 60 years this has been our specialty and the main part of our business. In towns throughout New England and the U.S. Committees have been put in place to keep from demolishing these historic structures and the first step in this process is either relocating or raising the historic structure to be set on a new foundation so history can be preserved for generations to come.
