Teaching

Current Teaching

2021 Fall Semester

Ancient Civilizations University of Massachusetts Amherst, Department of Anthropology

Ancient Civilizations is an introductory course that combines large lectures and small-group discussion sections. I write and deliver the lectures, develop exams and study materials, choose weekly reading assignments, create discussion section assignments, and work with four Teaching Assistants who supervise on-line and in-person discussion sections and grade exams and homework. Course enrollment is 330 students.

Human Ecology University of Massachusetts Amherst, Department of Anthropology

Human Ecology is a mid-level lecture course. I write and deliver the lectures, develop exams, writing assignments, and study materials, choose weekly reading assignments, and work with one Teaching Assistant grader. Course enrollment is 100 students.

Independent Study University of Massachusetts Amherst, Department of Anthropology

I am supervising three one-credit Honors Independent Study add-ons in Ancient Civilizations.

Internships University of Massachusetts Amherst, Department of Anthropology

I am supervising five undergraduate interns who are working with me to move and organize a large archaeological collection. In August 2011, more than 800 boxes of artifacts and related documents were removed from the shelves and shelves were moved and rebuilt in a new room. We are systematically moving, reshelving, and documenting the entire collection as well as preparing materials for visiting researchers and creating a comprehensive data base to allow researchers to quickly access requested materials and preparing for deaccessioning and transfer of select collections to more appropriate repositories.

Recent Teaching

2021 Spring Semester

Archaeology: Humans Past and Present (Honors) University of Massachusetts Amherst, Department of Anthropology

This was a small honors class held over zoom. Subjects covered included archaeological methods, theories, techniques, interpretation, and archaeology in its social contexts, as well as highlights of world prehistory. I prepared all lectures, assignments, discussion topics, and exams. Course enrollment was 23 students.

North American Archaeology University of Massachusetts Amherst, Department of Anthropology

North American Archaeology is a mid-level gen-ed lecture class. In the spring 2021 semester it was remote and asynchronous. I wrote and recorded the lectures, developed remote, asynchronous exams and written assignments, and supervised two Teaching Assistant graders. Course enrollment was 150 students.

Internships University of Massachusetts Amherst, Department of Anthropology

I supervised seven undergraduate interns who worked with me on several aspects of maintaining, improving, and organizing a large archaeological collection and curation center, including deaccessioning and transferring select collections to more appropriate repositories and preparing for the planned movement of the entire collection to a new room in the summer of 2021.
